

Building for a stronger future

As severe weather becomes more common, properties are more vulnerable to its effects. In the data below, we can see the profound impact of natural disasters on structures across the country and the critical need for resilient buildings.

Fortunately, taking proactive steps such as advocating for stronger building codes can help protect against damage and disruption.

62% of commercial property stakeholders across the country are very concerned about severe weather.

Nearly 100% of commercial property stakeholders agree that building code compliance is vital for protecting property from severe weather damage.

More than 1/3 of commercial property stakeholders have recently experienced damage from a natural disaster.

While many property owners recover quickly from damage, the cost can be steep.

88% fully recovered within 6 months.

49% of those with damage reported costs between $20,000 and $50,000.

The majority of commercial property stakeholders who own their property are willing to spend money to increase their structure's resilience.

 53% Nationally $20,000

 57% Wildfire-risk states $77,500

 66% Hurricane-risk states $50,000

Responding to the growing threat from severe weather is an important challenge, and we're steadfast in our dedication to building resiliency. Join us in advocating for change by supporting stronger building codes.

Together, we can build a more resilient future
